THE HISTORY OF
INCANDESCENT LAMPS.

One of the most satisfactory examples of the way in which inventions grow and produce new industries is, says Engineering, that of the manufacture of the incandescent electric lamp. In 1841 a specification was filed by Frederic de Moles, of Cheltenham, for a means of obtaining illumination by the use of an electric current and the incandescence of a platinum wire, aided by a falling stream of charcoal or plumbago particles. There was a glass globe which could be exhausted.
Incandescence was not, however, the only source of light, as there was provision for moving the platinum wire apart, and maintaining a circuit by a number of minute arcs formed between the particles of falling carbon. A device approximating more closely to the lamp of the present day was that invented by Mr. J. W. Starr, of Cincinnati. A thin strip of graphite, continuous Engineering, was held between two clamps the whole being suspended by a platinum wire sealed into a globe.
This globe was blown on to the upper end of a barometer tube of more than 31 in. in height, and was filled with mercury in the usual way, thus producing a Torricellian vacuum. Current was taken through the carbon conductor, heating it to incan-descence, and passed through the column of mercury, which was included in the circuit. Mr. Matthew Williams has given an interesting account of these early experiments, which date from as far back as 1846. It would appear from his statement that not only platinum but muniting diseases, Stearns' Wine of Cod Liver Oil is now very generally prescribed by the medical profession. It is a pure, rich wine, in which all the curative elements of cod liver oil are embodied, the only matter being eliminated. The addition of peptonate of iron adds to its valuable tonic effects.
